

Bring Robert Leighton's Books from the south of England to Dunblane

- When Robert Leighton died, his books were brought from the house, Broadhurst Manor (belonging to his sister Sapphira), in Horsted Keynes where he had lived when he retired
- His nephew Edward made all of the arrangements for Robert Leighton's 1400 books to be transported to Dunblane
- They were packed into chests and brought by horse and cart to London, then put on a ship to bring them to Leith, then on another ship to Stirling
- Then they were brought by horse and cart to Dunblane

Shake the dice to see who can get to Dunblane first

WELL DONE

You've arrived at the Leighton Library in Dunblane

FINISH

START

Start at Horsted Keynes where Robert Leighton had lived when he retired

The books are on the carrier John Morley's cart and ready to go to Scotland

The wind turns again. Your speed picks up
ADVANCE 3 SPACES

At Leith the chests have to be moved to a smaller ship. This takes longer than expected
MISS A TURN

More mud!
MISS A TURN

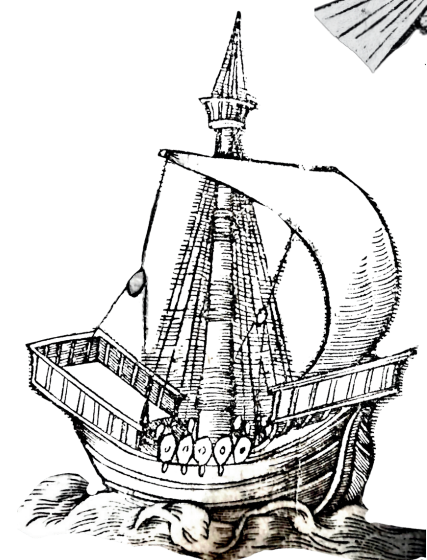

At Stirling the chests are quickly offloaded onto carts
ADVANCE 2 SPACES

Thick fog
MISS A TURN

The wind changes. Your progress slows
MISS A TURN

A chest of books goes missing. It might have been washed overboard
GO BACK 2 SPACES TO LOOK FOR IT

Your ship has a following wind and makes good speed
ADVANCE 3 SPACES

Map and navigation rose from 1602 "Tabularum Geographicarum" by Petrus Bertius
Image of ship and wind from 1554 "Cosmographiae Uniuersalis" by Sebastian Münster
Both books in the Leighton Library