The Parish Church of Auchtergaven and Moneydie was destroyed by fire on 25th February 2004.

It was built in 1812 and was the third church building on the same site, dating back to 1567. The building was Gothic style, a simple rectangular box with pointed windows and a horse-shoe gallery. At the front was the Grade B listed bell-tower with a crenellated parapet (gifted by the Duke of Atholl), housing a famous bell cast by Dutchman Otto Becker in 1757.

The church was sandstone-built with a pitch pine ceiling, and two memorial stained glass windows on the front wall.

A pipe organ was installed in 1906 at a cost of £600 and was overhauled and upgraded in 1989.

While only one active Church community remains in the Parish, in former times there were many.

There was another Parish at Logiebride, to the south-west of Auchtergaven, which was united with Auchtergaven by an Act of the Scottish Parliament in 1618 and later separated by the Bishop of Dunkeld. The Parishes were re-united in 1647 after the heritors and parishioners had petitioned the Presbytery of Dunkeld as it was considered inappropriate to support two stipends when the Parishes were so close together. The Church building at Logiebride has long since disappeared – only the surrounding graveyard still remains.

In 1979 the Parish of Moneydie was united with the Parish of Auchtergaven to form Auchtergaven and Moneydie Parish Church, as it is at present. The Moneydie Church building was sold in 1989. There is a separate publication, produced by West Stormont Historical Society, covering Moneydie Parish Graveyard and published in 2003.

There are many stones of considerable antiquity in the graveyard at Auchtergaven, notably that of the Rev. Alexander Anderson who was Minister of the Parish from 1627-1666.
