Kirkhill Graveyard

As the name suggests, a church once stood on the Kirk Hill at Luncarty. Dedicated to St Fillan it was described by Ian Cowan in his book on Scottish medieval parishes as “an independent parsonage at Lonchorn” (Luncarty). The first recorded vicar at St Fillans was Alexander Balfour who was parson on the 12th October 1546. He was followed by Walter Balfour who held the position until the Reformation (from 1560 onwards). The Balfour name was synonymous with St Fillans, as Sir Henry Balfour had been “rector at Loncartie” in 1526.

In 1567, at a time when there were not enough ministers to fill vacant pulpits, Alexander Moncur was appointed reader to Luncarty Parish Church. As few people could read, Moncur’s main duty was to keep the congregation together by the reading of the Common Book of Prayer and the Book of Scriptures. He held this position until 1582, when King James VI presented William Young as minister. By 1589 he had been removed to Redgorton Church.

No records can be found for the period between then and 1614 when Redgorton, Pitcairn and Luncarty were united as one parish and the kirk on the hill was allowed to fall into decay. The church is shown on Adair’s map (1650 -1722) and in Roy’s (1747-1755.) There is no trace of it in Stobie’s map of 1783.

Records do not give the exact location of Kirkhill church. However in keeping with the religious practices of the time, consecrated land sometimes became burial grounds. Occasionally the earthen floors of churches still in use, were used for the burial of local gentry. Flat stones covered these graves and in time they sank below the surface. In the old graveyard at Kirkhill wide spaces between the stones indicate that far more people have been buried there than there are stones to indicate their passing.

The enclosure wall, the work of craftsmen, includes a set of up and over steps for access on foot when the gates were locked. The morthouse with 1832 on the door lintel, is open to all seasons, full of debris and litter. Once it had held coffins until such time as the bodies were of no use to the grave robbers of that era. In researching her family history, one Society member heard that her great-grandfather had been one of those fearless men who sat at night guarding the bodies in Kirkhill morthouse.

The oldest burial recorded is dated 1744 and the stone erected in 1750 conveys in words and symbols the life and work of Alexander Rutherford, his wife Grizel Scot and son John (cover illustration). In prominent position, the anvil and hammer together with the crown and cross are the symbols and marks of a blacksmiths trade. Alexander holds his gun with his dog precariously perched on the end, his boat and fishing rod are on the right. Could Alexander also have also been a gamekeeper? He and his wife’s initials are inscribed in large letters, as was the custom of that period.

A table-stone, adjacent to the Rutherford stone, is a memorial to Hector Turnbull and his extended family who are buried “near to this place”. About 1690 William Sandeman bought a farm and some fields for bleaching thread, from Col. Robert Graham of Redgorton Estate. He acquired more land and expanded his business into the bleaching of cloth. Hector Turnbull, his partner, was responsible for the practical running of the business. Luncarty village grew with the firm's expansion and through successive owners Luncarty Bleachworks became the largest of its kind in Britain. The families of Sandeman and Turnbull inter-married and the table-stone is only one of the family stones of the Turnbills. (Three memorials are to be found in Greyfriars Graveyard).

The last recorded burial in the old graveyard was in 1934 but an extension was already in use by 1928. Also enclosed by walls, the dividing wall between old and new has been retained. Twice the size of the old part it contains 172 gravestones with a large area not yet in use. Many of those buried here are entire families employed in the Bleachworks whose lives were immersed in the community life of the village. The Bleachworks closed in 1996 and the village has further enlarged to become a commuter village with a new place of worship. The history of Luncarty, its people and work, can be read on the hill where a kirk once stood.
