Redgorton Parish Church and Graveyard

Redgorton, Luncarty and Pitcairn were united in 1614 forming the parish of Redgorton. Luncarty was dedicated to St. Fillan, Pitcairn to St. Serf and Redgorton to St. Mary.

A charter given at Kinross dated 1229 by Alexander II confirmed a previous grant to the Abbey of Scone of the church at Redgorton. It is therefore built on a site that had been used for religious purposes for about eight hundred years.

The present church was incorporated into or reconstructed from a previous building of 1690. A mason's stone on the south wall of the present church dates its erection as 1776.

When Historic Scotland listed it as Category B in 1971 it was described as originally being "a plain rubble rectangle with simple bell-cote and with the pulpit erected between two south-facing windows".

It proved to be too small for the number of parishioners attending and particularly at communion services some worshippers had to stand at the open door.

Although it was ceiled in 1812 it was not until 1841 that the church was enlarged by the addition of galleries which changed its shape to a T-Plan. It was thought that at that time the windows were given wooden Tudor mullions and arches with pointed heads. The walls were repointed in 1871. A few years later a harmonium was installed and a hot water heating system followed in 1891.

In recent years the churches of Redgorton and Stanley were united. A Church Centre was built in the village of Luncarty and the need for costly repairs resulted in the closure of the parish church. Services are now conducted in the Centre. The future for the building that has served the parishioners of Redgorton for over two hundred years is now uncertain.

The walled churchyard surrounds the church on three sides and within its grounds is a mort-house dated 1832 and a session house listed Category B and described as "a simple single-storey building with a peinded roof and a sundial dated 1732 re-set in the corner of a wall".

The ground at the front of the main door has some very old stones, the earliest legible one dated 1680. This burial ground was in use at the time of the previous church. In the late 19th century an extension was made to the churchyard and this part is still in use for burials.

The trees in the graveyard were planted in 1951 in memory of David Millar, a poet and foot traveller, whose poem "The Tay" describes Redgorton Church and kirkyard as "desolate and treeless". A plaque to his memory can be found inside the church.
