Scams in the news

War in Ukraine

Unfortunately, scammers are quick to capitalise on whatever is in the news and in March we were alerted to scams purporting to raise money for those affected by the conflict in Ukraine.

Fraudsters have used a variety of methods to get potential victims to part with their cash, including selling t-shirts, soliciting cryptocurrency donations, and sending scam emails soliciting funds.

Always: Check a charity's name and registration number at Gov.uk check a charity to confirm its legitimacy.

- Type the address of the charity website rather than clicking on a link when donating online.
- Report suspicious emails by forwarding them to: report@phishing.gov.uk

Rise in energy prices and the cost of living

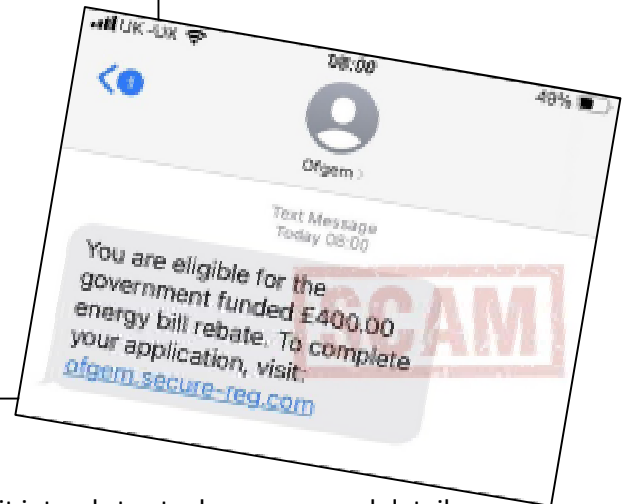

May and June have seen a rash of energy related scams and frauds as everyone became more concerned about rises in energy bills.

First, an email purporting to be from Ofgem with details of how to receive your £150 rebate began doing the rounds, closely followed by texts and recorded phone messages also apparently from Ofgem offering help to claim further energy rebates.

Please give safely

The banner features a blue top half and a yellow bottom half. The text "Please give safely" is written in yellow on the blue background.

www.gov.uk/checkcharity

Ofgem never send these kinds of messages, they are scams.

- Do not ring a number given - someone on the end of it intends to steal your personal details.
- Do not click on a link unless it is from someone you know and trust.
- To report a suspicious text message for free forward it to 7726.

Genuine information on how to receive energy rebates can be found at Gov.uk.

Product safety

Dangers of button batteries

Leicestershire Trading Standards were pleased to support the Office for Product Safety and Standards #Nilbymouth campaign during April. The campaign highlighted the dangers of button batteries and small magnets when swallowed by small children.

- Button batteries are found in many household gadgets and toys, they react with saliva to make caustic soda, which is used to unblock drains.
- If a child swallows a button battery and it gets stuck in their food pipe, it can burn a hole. This causes internal bleeding and can kill.
- Larger lithium 'coin cell' batteries (about the size of a five pence piece) are the most dangerous.
- Smaller batteries can be inserted into places such as ears and noses, causing serious injuries for children if undetected.

- If you think your child has swallowed button batteries, take them straight to A&E. Take the product packaging, toy, or gadget with you if you can.

Dangers of small magnets

During checks at East Midlands Airport our team took a sample of a magnetic toy. Magnetic toys can be extremely dangerous and must comply with strict rules relating to magnet strength. If a child swallows magnets, they can be forced together in the intestines or bowels. This squeezes the tissue and cuts off blood supply, which can quickly cause harm and kill.

When this product was formally tested the magnet strength was found to be almost 15 times permitted strength. The product had a CE mark which has obviously falsely been applied to convince consumers that the goods are safe. This was for sale on a well-known fulfilment house and the goods have now been removed from sale.

Small magnets can be found in many products including adult desk and magnet sphere construction toys, fridge magnets, fake piercings, and drink charms.

Safety advice:

- Keep products with small or loose magnets away from young children.
- Magnets can be released from faulty toys, inspect toys for damage and remove from use.
- If your child has swallowed magnets, they may have stomach pain, vomit, have a fever, or point to their throat or stomach.
- If you think a child has swallowed small magnets take them straight to A&E.

Food safety alerts and recalls

April also saw several large-scale food safety recalls concerning potential salmonella contamination in everyday foods.

The most widely publicised alert concerned Kinder surprise chocolate products. Some Kinder products were still to be found several weeks after the recall began in smaller independent stores.

Another alert concerned chicken found in many high street branded supermarket wraps, sandwiches, and salad products.

Animal welfare prosecution

Our Animal Health Team investigates reports relating to farmed animal welfare in the county.

A firm has been fined £44,000 after a Leicestershire Trading Standards investigation. 27,000 chickens died at a farm in Leicestershire following poultry shed malfunction.

Illegal tobacco and vapes

Our team has continued to be kept busy looking into reports of the sale of illegal tobacco and vaping products in the county.

Trade in Illegal tobacco products is proven to be linked to organised crime networks. Its sale costs the Treasury £2bn each year, harms legitimate businesses and presents dangers to public health.

In March, as part of a joint operation with Leicestershire Police, we seized illegal cigarettes and tobacco from a local store.

Leicestershire Trading Standards News

During April and May, we investigated reports of counterfeit vaping products. Our team seized a quantity of counterfeit Elf Bar Vapes from a shop in the county.

Counterfeit goods are unlikely to be made to the same standards as the genuine products, which can present safety issues to the users.

We are continuing to investigate sales of illegal vaping products which are routinely seized for destruction. These include genuine branded items that are not compliant with UK safety regulations and standards.

Trading Standards acts on intelligence reports, including those from members of the public. To anonymously report illicit tobacco activity, use our Online Reporting Form.

And finally...

Getting away from it all

Hoping to put a difficult 2 years firmly behind us, many have been planning holidays to somewhere, anywhere, other than here. Unfortunately, this meant travel chaos for many over the spring half term break with warnings of further airline disruptions in the coming summer months.

Find out what to do if you have a flight cancelled or delayed. You might be able to get compensation.

Know your rights before you book:
Airlines and your rights

And, because you so deserve that lovely break you're planning make sure you follow these top tips to avoid holiday fraud:

- When booking, use a credit card where possible, for purchases over £100-£30,000 you will receive Section 75 protection under the Consumer Credit Act, this offers extra protection if anything goes wrong.
- Use secure payment methods recommended by reputable retailers.
- Always avoid paying by bank transfer, especially if you're booking with someone you don't know.
